STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

This building of ashlar stone is two bays wide and six stories high.

The first story consists of a store front of one large sheet glass window to the left, and a double glass door with a one piece transom above. The space around the window and doors are sheathed with metal paneling. Above this is a sign which spans the width of the facade.

Second floors windows are paired and placed within jointed round arches rising from sills placed slightly above a projecting cornice. Each window of the pair is round-arched, double hung with six-over-four lights, and separated from the other by a round, unfluted, Ionic-capped pilaster. The resultant spandrels created by the two smaller arches within the larger are decorated with roundels flanked by curvilinear triangles.

Above these windows is another, narrower projecting cornice. The third story window sills follow this; their windows are set on flat arches without lintels. These windows are double hung, with four-over-four lights, and have a bipartite transom. Again the windows of each pair are separated by a round, unfluted, Ionic-capped pilaster.

Between the third and fourth story windows are two decorative rectangular panels containing a rounded flanked by two rectangles.

Fourth story windows are the same as those of the third story with the exception that they are fitted with window baskets. Between the fourth and fifth stories are decorative panels identical to those described above.

Fifth story windows are identical to those of the second story, with the exception that these have projecting sills. Above these windows is a strip of egg and dart moulding, which emphasize the projecting cornice directly above it.

Sixth story windows and pilasters rest on a common sill. The pilasters on either end are broad and flat, and have palmetto-ornamented capitals. Within these pilasters are four round, unfluted, Ionic-capped pilasters; set between these are three double hung windows with six-over-six lights, set in flat-arched recesses. The windows rise to the height of the pilasters and therefore meet the projecting lintel which extends across the entire arrangement. Above this is a blank entablature topped by another slightly projecting cornice. Roof braces appear next. The roof itself is flat, but a tiled, steeply pitched rampart flanked by two tall, rectangular chimneys gives the appearance, from street level, of a mansard roof.
